

The International Monetary Fund's Regional Office for Asia and the Pacific (OAP), located in Tokyo, is seeking an economist to work as a part of an international team on a variety of assignments, including monitoring macroeconomic and financial developments in Japan and in the region, and conducting economic research. The position is available for a fixed term, and the salary will be commensurate with background and experience. The successful applicant will have experience in macroeconomics, finance, or a related field. An advanced degree would be advantageous, as would familiarity with the Japanese and other major economies in Asia. The applicant should also have strong data management and PC skills, be able to multitask under pressure, and have good command of both English and Japanese.

As the IMF's window on the region, OAP contributes to economic surveillance and research, takes the lead in the IMF's on-the-ground involvement in regional cooperation, manages regional capacity building programs, and promotes the understanding and two-way dialogue of the IMF in Asia and the Pacific.
