

Todd Mattina is a Deputy Division Chief in the Fiscal Affairs Department of the International Monetary Fund (IMF). He is a contributor on recent IMF policy papers related to resource-rich developing countries and has delivered lectures on the topic to parliamentarians and policymakers in low-income countries. Todd has experience working on diverse fiscal policy issues in the region, including a planned scaling up of development spending in Ethiopia, the oil revenue management system in Chad and fiscal policy modeling in South Africa. He previously worked at the Canada Pension Plan Investment Board where he helped build the firm's global macro investment group. Todd obtained his PhD in international finance from Queen's University and is originally from Toronto, Canada.